

A young child with brown hair, wearing a dark blue raincoat and light blue pants, stands on a grassy area next to a yellow mailbox mounted on a wooden utility pole. The child has their hands raised in a playful gesture. The background shows a dirt path and trees with autumn foliage. The text "Hands off my mail!" is overlaid on the left side of the image in a white, bold, sans-serif font with a red outline. The word "my" is underlined.

Hands off my mail!

United Parcel Service (UPS) says that Canada's publicly funded network of mailboxes and post offices gives Canada Post an unfair advantage. So UPS is using the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) to sue Canadians for $230 million.

Canadians paid for Canada Post's network so that everyone, no matter where they live, can afford to communicate with each other - no small feat in a country that's largely rural.

If UPS is successful, Canada Post will have less money to service costly rural areas. And UPS is really only interested in doing business in lucrative urban areas. It's all about the money.

Tell UPS that our public postal service is too important to be undermined by a courier company that puts profits before service.

Tell UPS - No way, Eh?

Name: _____

Address: _____

Produced by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the Council of Canadians

Council of Canadians
700-170 Laurier Ave.
Ottawa, ON K1P5V5

N'y touchez pas.
C'est à moi.

